

CREATURE OF THE DEEP

The fish William Beebe saw from his bathysphere deep in the cold ocean's darkest depths were bizarre and alien looking. Imagine your own deep-sea creature that has its own bioluminescent light source to help it hunt, confuse predators, or communicate. The stranger, the better! Draw your creature below and describe its unique adaptations.

A large white rectangular area for drawing, set against a dark blue background. On the left side of the background, there are four illustrations of deep-sea creatures: a large, dark, diamond-shaped creature with a long, thin, trailing appendage; a long, thin, yellowish fish; a dark, segmented, worm-like creature with a large, open mouth; and a dark, oval-shaped creature with a glowing, segmented body.
